Abstract

Mentoring is widely used at Curtin University of Technology (CUT) to support students and staff in their learning and in their professional development. This paper outlines findings from two different surveys taken one year apart to determine the nature and extent of the use of mentoring by academic staff at CUT to support learning. Findings from this research and other planned studies will inform the development of a broad-based mentoring programme in multiple discipline areas at CUT.

Keywords: mentoring, lifelong learning.
